

What's That Smell?

Written by Brad Cloud

Wednesday, 29 September 2010 12:47 - Last Updated Wednesday, 10 November 2010 14:34

{comments on}

Ah...the smell of Autumn. Wait, that's someone's shoe!

I think we stepped out of our comfort zone yesterday. We took our shoes off in class, and a noticeable aroma, uh, visited us. It was quite an experience.

So the obvious question arises, "Why did you take your shoes off in class?" The answer is purely scientific. We removed our shoes, because we are currently learning about scientific classification, and it seemed to me that shoes would be great specimens for the job. And they were.

What's That Smell?

Written by Brad Cloud

Wednesday, 29 September 2010 12:47 - Last Updated Wednesday, 10 November 2010 14:34

Of course, learning about classification was not the "sole" objective. I think many students enjoyed the relaxation of being shoeless in an environment where shoelessness is not common. Overall, the day was a success. We will now move into a more in-depth study of classification.